Executive Summary

The Foundation for Essential Needs (FFEN) is launching the "Set Sail to Serve Others" campaign to increase awareness and clarify its role in Minnesota's hunger relief ecosystem. FFEN is a nonprofit that strengthens food shelves by providing operational support, engaging volunteers, and offering strategic consulting. The campaign's main objectives are to increase awareness of FFEN's mission among food shelf leaders and donors, differentiate FFEN from direct food providers, and increase donor funding.

The targeted audiences are longtime donors who are seeking measurable impact from their contributions, as well as food shelf owners and organizers who are looking for efficient, effective support to enhance their operations. According to post-consultation surveys, food shelves indicate appreciation for FFEN's recommendations, though implementation varies due to internal challenges or timing issues. Donors are generally supportive but desire clearer reporting on outcomes and impact.

We want food shelves to view FFEN as a collaborative partner that can enhance their capacity to serve communities effectively. We would like donors to recognize FFEN as a reliable and effective organization that helps make their donations go further.

The "Set Sail to Serve Others" campaign uses a nautical theme to resonate with Minnesota's cultural identity and FFEN's mission of guiding food shelves toward improved service experiences. The campaign will utilize a mix of print ads, social media content, email, and PR and promotional materials to convey FFEN's role and impact.

The key messages from this campaign are that FFEN is a vital partner in the Minnesota food ecosystem, enhancing the effectiveness of food shelves across the state. Through strategic support and volunteer engagement, FFEN ensures that every dollar and effort goes further by serving communities.

To ensure the campaign is meeting its goals, success will be measured by tracking impressions, website traffic, social media engagement, and donation behavior to evaluate its impact and optimize content strategies.

The "Set Sail to Serve Others" campaign is on a mission to create more dignified and effective hunger relief solutions across Minnesota.

It helps clarify FFEN's role within the hunger relief ecosystem while encouraging engagement from both food shelves and donors. By increasing awareness of FFEN and its services and using quantitative data, the campaign will strengthen FFEN's reputation as a reliable partner for organizations working to meet community needs. As awareness grows, we aim to deepen relationships with food shelves, inspire consistent donor support, and help ensure that resources and services are used as effectively as possible to improve communities across Minnesota.

Creative Brief

What is our message?

“Set sail to serve others” FFEN is fresh, efficient and respectful.

What do we want to accomplish?

Increase and strengthen awareness of FFEN and its mission among food banks and donors. FFEN should not be confused with food shelves. The goal is to clarify how FFEN supports food shelves, grow donor funding and expand the impact of FFEN’s volunteers and organizational services.

Who are we talking to?

Longtime donors who consistently support FFEN. Food shelf owners and organizers looking to strengthen and expand their impact.

Creative Brief

5

What does the audience think of FFEN right now?

CLIENTS

Insights come from surveys completed after working with FFEN. Many shelves speak positively about what they have implemented. However, some appreciate the consultation suggestions but do not implement them because of concerns about internal readiness and strategic timing. Additional feedback comes from emails, training video comments, one-on-one conversations and virtual chats. Food shelf staff and organizers are primarily active on Facebook.

DONORS

Donors tend to be more business-minded and focused on how their money is spent. They are primarily active on LinkedIn, though engagement is relatively low. Insights can be gathered from emails, platform interactions and stakeholder interviews. Donors are generally supportive but seek clearer reporting on impact and outcomes.

Creative Brief

What does the client want them to think?

FFEN is trustworthy, efficient and a smart partner for fighting food insecurity. They work alongside food banks and food shelves to help donations go farther.

What should they think?

FFEN is a powerful tool for addressing food insecurity. It works side by side with food shelves to improve systems and operations. Its support helps every dollar stretch farther and increases access to fresh food, creating a broader community impact.

Why should they think that?

FFEN needs to be seen as a trustworthy, efficient and impactful partner in the fight against food insecurity. To build awareness and eliminate confusion about its role, we will create a suite of integrated advertising and public relations materials that clearly differentiate FFEN from food shelves while showcasing its vital role in supporting food systems.

What is our BIG IDEA?

Set Sail is a campaign that uses a nautical and Minnesota theme to promote dignity, choice and collaboration in Minnesota's food shelf system. The campaign invites donors, volunteers and community members to work side by side to keep food shelves organized, well-stocked with fresh food, and full of dignity.

Narratives about Minnesota and organizations tie the campaign together across social media, newsletters, posters and promotional materials. Our big idea is helping others and improving impacts.

FFEN provides expertise and knowledge to transform your food shelf into a welcoming environment with fresh food.

Situation Analysis

7

Strengths

FFEN is positive in its vision and mission. The staff and veteran volunteers are well-trained and experienced in the project. Those involved in FFEN bring expertise from other professions and specialties, giving the organization an advantage in a variety of ways.

Weaknesses

Social media pages and presence will benefit from more consistency. FFEN is always looking for ways to spread the word. Partnering with members of the community, schools or businesses can help reach new clients, volunteers and partners.

Threats

Threats to FFEN include growing rates of hunger, climate change and the political climate. Tariffs, inflation, access to fresh food and keeping up with demand are all factors FFEN needs to consider.

Opportunities

Opportunities for FFEN include consistent use of social media, storytelling and relationships with community groups. The more people who know about FFEN, the better, whether for volunteer opportunities, becoming a client or making a donation.

Audience Analysis

FOOD SHELVES

- Hunger is a devastating and widespread crisis affecting people close to home.
- Food shelf clients often face significant stress and many daily responsibilities.
- FFEN's role is to create seamless, clean and organized spaces to ease that burden.
- The goal is to make life easier for clients and, in turn, make addressing hunger more effective.
- Communication is vital to ensure efforts align with a meaningful, lasting vision.
- FFEN believes in meeting clients where they are and pursuing practical, achievable solutions.

DONORS

- FFEN's donors contribute time, skills and expertise that are essential to advancing the mission.
- FFEN welcomes all kinds of involvement, from photography to accounting to social media.
- Donors choose how they want to participate and can see their impact every day.
- Hunger is a persistent challenge, and greater community involvement leads to a stronger impact.
- Donating to FFEN means being an active part of eliminating barriers to food access.

Objectives

Overall

Donors and food shelves must clearly understand FFEN's offerings and its impact on the broader food ecosystem. The goal is to increase awareness of FFEN among food shelves and donors in Minnesota and Wisconsin. It is important to communicate how FFEN's services and digital tools help food shelves stay organized and maximize the value of donations.

Key Outcomes:

More donors are signing up for updates or making contributions.

There is an increase in inquiries from food shelves requesting support and resources.

Big Idea

Campaign Goals:

- Rally community support around transforming food shelves.
- Promote spaces that offer choice, fresh food and respect to clients.

Challenges Faced by Food Shelves:

- Inefficient layouts
- Limited resources
- Barriers to offering client choice and freshness

FFEN's Role:

- Provide tools, data and expertise
- Help food shelves become more organized, efficient and client-focused
- Support reimagined layouts, smarter systems and stronger community partnerships

Ongoing Messaging:

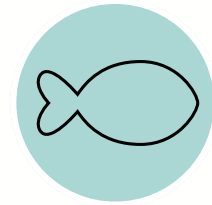

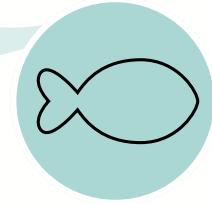

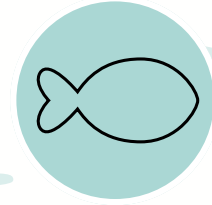

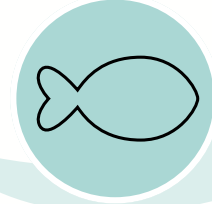

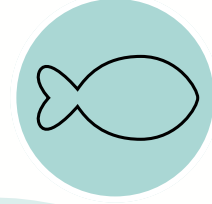

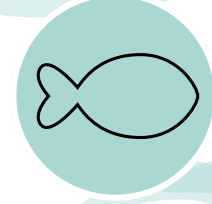

- Shared across social media, press releases and more
- Highlights real stories of transformation and progress
- Reinforces values of organization, service and Minnesota resilience

FFEN announces new campaign ‘Set Sail to Serve Others’ The new campaign will spread awareness about FFEN to food banks and donors

Saint Paul, Minn. – May 8, 2025 – The Foundation for Essential Needs’ (FFEN) new campaign, “Set Sail to Serve Others,” spreads awareness that FFEN is a trustworthy, efficient and smart partner for fighting food insecurity, working alongside food banks and food shelves to help donations go further.

FFEN is a powerful organization that addresses food insecurity. Although FFEN does not provide food directly, it strengthens the organizations that work side by side with it to improve efficiency in their systems and operations. FFEN has experienced professionals who collaborate and consult with food bank and food shelf leadership to make their food shelves accessible.

Set Sail uses nautical themes and Minnesota pride to rally donors, professionals, volunteers and community members around a shared mission to make food shelves across the state more efficient, dignified and collaborative. Together, we can raise the standard in every food shelf. For more information about the “Set Sail” campaign, FFEN’s services or to get involved, please visit <https://ffenn.org>.

Dear [Journalist Name],

At the Foundation for Essential Needs (FFEN), we work side by side with food shelves to improve the food ecosystem in Minnesota. FFEN recently partnered with [Food Shelf Name] in [Location] to transform how hunger relief is delivered. The food shelf was redesigned to serve people more efficiently and with greater dignity.

Before the partnership, [Food Shelf Name] served about [number] people each month. That number has increased to [number], thanks to layout improvements and expanded fresh food offerings that allow shoppers to choose items that meet their needs.

We've seen your work in [Name of Publication], and given your focus on nonprofit and community reporting, we'd love to offer you a different perspective on the food security process. We can coordinate interviews with FFEN leadership, volunteers and food shelf staff.

Please let me know if you're interested.

Sincerely,
The FFEN Team

The House Is Not Doing Its Job Cutting SNAP Would Devastate Communities Across the U.S.

The Senate must put Americans first and fully fund programs that combat hunger in the U.S.

In 2024, a survey conducted by Second Harvest Heartland found that 26 percent of Minnesota households with at least one child under 18 experienced food insecurity. The survey also found that 18 percent of the state was served by Minnesota's emergency food system. According to Feeding America, 183,480 children in Minnesota alone faced hunger in 2024.

Some may argue that government efficiency is long overdue. House Republicans estimate that cutting Supplemental Nutrition Assistance Program funding would save roughly $300 billion. But funding for hunger relief is essential and should not be on the chopping block.

There are more than 400 food shelves in Minnesota working to ensure families have access to food. Many rely on federal funding to maintain operations. That support enables food shelves to provide critical services to communities across the state. These programs are effective. Cutting funding would treat hunger as an inevitable consequence of poverty rather than a preventable injustice.

All people deserve proper nutrition. Grant-funded programs like SNAP are often a lifeline for food shelves, food banks and third-party organizations that help families put food on the table. According to the Minnesota Department of Human Services, the proposed federal spending reduction on SNAP would mean the state must cover its annual maintenance, which costs $220 million. Food banks have also experienced cuts across the country, including $500 million in government commodity food.

Federal cuts to hunger relief programs would result in devastating and lasting impacts on families and communities. If Congress fails to fully fund these services, the consequences will continue to ripple through Minnesota and across the U.S. Hunger is often the result of economic disruption, housing instability or unexpected expenses. Second Harvest Heartland found that roughly 40 percent of those facing hunger are not eligible for federal food assistance. The demand for affordable housing is high, and a lack of options forces families to spend more on housing, leaving less for other basic needs. Inflation has also led to higher costs and reduced purchasing power for those who rely on food shelves.

The consequences for children are especially severe. Childhood hunger affects academic performance, physical development and emotional well-being. Children without consistent access to food often struggle in school, are more likely to suffer from health issues such as anemia and asthma, and face emotional burdens such as stress, shame and isolation.

When kids are hungry, they worry more about where their next meal will come from and are less able to focus on their future success, including academics, sports and personal interests. Food insecurity can also make it more difficult for children to form friendships, as not having food when others are eating can be embarrassing. Hunger impacts emotions, causing frustration and other challenges.

More than 300 food shelves operate in Minnesota, offering free food to local communities. These food shelves, food banks and partner organizations work together to make sure no child goes hungry. When we invest in feeding children today, we are investing in a stronger and healthier Minnesota for future generations.

Evaluation

This campaign's mission is to increase awareness of FFEN among food shelves and donors, along with their engagement in FFEN's services and resources. While we recommend tracking specific key performance indicators, the main focus should be on impressions. This will help determine how widely the content is being seen and whether views increase over the course of the campaign.

Donor engagement:

Monitor changes in website traffic, especially to the donation, event and campaign-specific pages. Review email open rates and click-through rates to assess interest in FFEN's materials. Track donation trends, including new donors, repeat contributions and shifts in average donation amounts compared to pre-campaign data.

Food shelves:

Measure direct inquiries, resource downloads and referrals from food banks. Track online conversions such as intake form submissions or service sign-ups. Establishing a consistent system to track impressions across all platforms will allow for performance comparisons and help guide content improvements.

For both audiences:

- Use social media engagement (likes, comments, shares) to understand what resonates.
- Target donors on LinkedIn and food shelves on Facebook with tailored content.
- Improve Instagram presence by varying post styles and using Stories to increase visibility.
- Monitor platform metrics to track impressions and use this data to adjust future content
